hi from Dr Michael Molton...

.....small steps are good for holding back natural aging

It's easy for me to get enthused by some of the great ways we can bring patients the opportunity to continue to look the best they can for years to come.

The best thing is that small steps are good. Having just had some work myself, it was important to me not to change the way people responded to my personality which can be affected by sudden significant appearance changes.

Being in the business, so to speak, I already know that the foundations upon which our features are built, change as we age. The jaw bone or mandible as it's known, loses a lot of bone size and it's shape rolls under the neck too. The bony structure of the front of the face also changes shape.

So, even if we wanted to, we couldn't transplant a 25 year old face on to a 50 year old because it wouldn't fit properly.

It would also look darn silly. Taking the natural processes of aging, and working with that maturity, small steps of volume replacement in the correct areas of the face can provide really effective and natural improvements.

A small volume of natural dermal fillers, or even permanent polyacrylamide gels, in the upper cheek for instance, can produce quite a lift upwards.

It's often a big mistake to be putting those products in say the lines from the nose to the mouth (nasolabial folds) or into the marionette lines. This is simply because, the pathology is in the areas immediately above them,. In the upper cheek area.

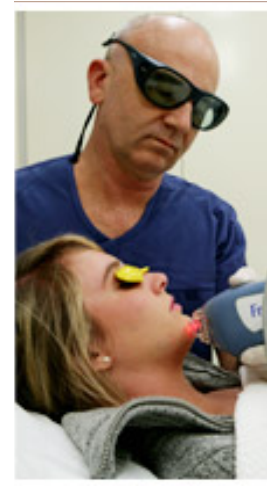

Take a careful look in the mirror and you will often see a shadow where the 'tear trough' lies just below the cheekbone. That shadow represents a loss in volume of the natural adipose pad of the cheek and is often why the jawline and mouth is drifting down, giving us that 'down-in-the-mouth' appearance.

Combine this with Thermage and Fraxel, you can often achieve a fabulous natural effects that will only attract comments like 'you are looking healthy....life is obviously agreeing with you', instead of 'when did you get your lips done?'

Hope to see you soon!

Is it time you revisited Dr Molton to evaluate how the aging process can be reduced ? Remember, there is no cost to consult if you are an established patient at epiclinic

Thermage

Tightening for face and body

Thermage™ is a non-invasive, radio frequency device used for tightening, lifting and contouring the face and body. Most patients will only need one treatment and all are able to get back to normal everyday activities as soon as they like. In fact, we are so confident that you can book a romantic dinner for two that very evening!

The Thermage™ procedure works by delivering Radio Frequency Energy deeply into the collagen levels of your skin to stimulate and promote new collagen growth over six months. Most of our patients receive 20% of their result immediately. Thermage™ can tighten the skin safely on most body parts including face, neck, eyes, tummy, arms, hands, thighs, and buttocks.

Thermage™ is also a fantastic follow up procedure for our lift plus to hold and improve the result further. There are so many fantastic things we can do to keep you looking the best you can for the age that you are....for as long as possible.
